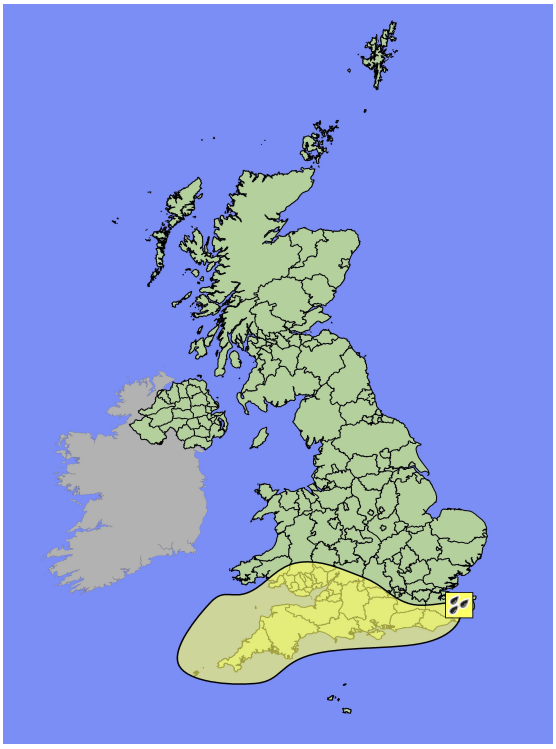
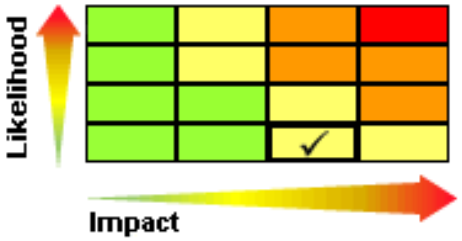
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
There are still some uncertainties with regard to developments into Sunday, including the areas which will be worst affected. Nevertheless there is a strong signal for another period of distinctly unpleasant weather, with the potential for a further 30 to 50mm of rain in places, falling on near-saturated ground. This will be exacerbated by the strong winds referred to above.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Rain

Valid from 00:00 on Sun, 29th Apr 2012 until 23:59 on Sun, 29th Apr 2012

Another vigorous depression is expected to spread heavy rain and strong winds into southern and some central areas of England and Wales on Sunday.

The public should be aware that this may lead to some impacts in terms of localised flooding given recent wet conditions, and that easterly winds may exceed 50mph in exposed locations, again leading to some impacts, such as fallen branches.
